ORBYT

A Growth Strategy for the Next 6–12 Months

Seeding a curated healthtech network — one bucket, one trust level, one channel at a time.

Prepared by Harsh Makhija | The Healthtech Collective — Tech Internship

This is a seeding problem, not an awareness problem

What Orbyt actually is

- A hyper-curated inner circle spun out of THC — "first 100 members," apply/invite-only.
- Zero independent audience today: no dedicated social presence beyond THC's own channels.
- Inherits 100% of its trust and reach from THC's existing 5,000+ member ecosystem and 80+ past events.
- Positioned on "accountability, context, and access" — not open networking.

0 / 100

members seeded — the entire growth problem in one number

Trust isn't built — it's borrowed from THC

Three buckets, three trust levels

Founders

ENTRY POINT

Direct outreach

Email → 15-min call → pitch. Reachable, motivated, tolerate cold outreach.

Investors & Corporates

ENTRY POINT

Associates first

Reach analysts/associates, not partners. They champion upward once they see value.

Hospitals & Operators

ENTRY POINT

Warm intro only

Most access-gated. Never cold. Routed through existing THC members.

What's missing, and why it's an opening

No independent social presence

Zero content or credibility outside THC's own channels — trust has nowhere to build before a person is asked to apply.

No SEO footprint

Not a problem: this category is referral-driven, not search-driven. Low priority by design, not by neglect.

No proof-of-outcome content

No visible stories of intros made, pilots landed, co-founders found — the exact content that makes "context and access" tangible.

A real, dated event already planned

The launch party is the single best asset in the whole plan — a live, senior-management-attended recruitment moment.

The closed-network landscape

	GrowthX (India)	On Deck	Chief	Ivy Exec
Model	Referral-led, 4,000+ members	Sector cohorts, ~100–200	Application, senior women execs	Curated exec job board
Entry	Apply + member referral	Apply, thousands apply	Apply + vetted	Apply / employer-driven
Signal for Orbyt	Closest live template — copy the referral loop	Validates "first 100" cohort sizing	Validates employer-sponsored membership	Cautionary: avoid the "job board" drift

The tool stack, mapped to each bucket

	TOOLS	WHY
Founders	Apollo.io (filter: healthtech founders) + Instantly / lemlist	Volume-tolerant channel — filters + sequencing do real work here.
Investors & Corporates	Apollo.io (filter: Associate / Analyst) + Happenstance	Target one level below the decision-maker; let them champion upward.
Hospitals & Operators	Happenstance + THC's own Luma attendee data	Surfaces real warm paths through people THC already knows — no cold list.

Why the channel has to match the trust level

10–25×

better conversion for warm intros vs. cold lists

20–30%

warm intro → first meeting with investors, vs. 1–2% cold

84%

of B2B decisions start with a referral

Founders can absorb cold outreach at volume. Investors and hospital operators can't — going in cold isn't just weaker, it's the wrong motion entirely.

FREE, FIRST-PARTY SOURCE + THE ANCHOR EVENT

Mine THC's own network before reaching outside it

THC's existing data

- Luma — 80+ past events' worth of attendee data (name, title, company) already exists as free, warm, first-party data.
- nas.io — THC's community platform likely holds member profile/tag data.
- Process: export attendee lists → tag into the 3 buckets → this becomes both the seed list and the referral-ask list.

The launch party

- In-person registration, senior management attendees — the first real touchpoint for the two hardest buckets.
- Best used as a warm-intro-in-person moment, not a cold ask.
- Follow with small curated same-bucket roundtables (6–8 people) — mirrors THC's own past roundtable format.
- Doubles as the first real content asset: pre-event teasers, live capture, post-event recap.

SECTION 5 — CONTENT IDEAS

Narrative content anchored in real moments

1 Anonymized outcome stories

"How the intro happened" — a founder found a co-founder, a doctor landed a tier-1 hospital pilot. Mirrors the site's own social-proof ticker.

2 Launch-party teaser series

Pre-event: "an operator from a unicorn is coming" style posts — builds anticipation without naming names.

3 Founding-member LinkedIn posts

Personal posts from real early members ("I just got into the first 100") — travels further than any brand account.

4 Post-event recap content

Photos, quotes, on-the-spot reactions from the launch party — the first real proof-of-content Orbyt will have.

Phased around the launch party, not the calendar

PHASE 1

Pre-Launch Party

- Mine THC's Luma + nas.io data, tag into 3 buckets
- Begin founder outreach (Apollo.io + Instantly)
- Map warm paths via Happenstance for buckets 2 & 3
- Start teaser content for the launch party

PHASE 2

Launch Party

- Run the event as the core acquisition moment
- In-person registration for senior mgmt + operators
- Live content capture (photos, quotes, reactions)
- Seed the referral/nomination mechanic with attendees

PHASE 3

Post-Launch Party

- Small curated same-bucket roundtables (6–8 people)
- Publish recap + outcome-story content
- Nurture sequence for waitlisted applicants (email)
- Review bucket mix — rebalance outreach as needed

If we do five things

1. Run the launch party as the core acquisition engine — not a side event — for the two hardest buckets.
2. Mine THC's own Luma + community data first; it's free, warm, and already self-selected.
3. Match channel to trust level: outbound for founders, one-level-down for investors, warm-only for hospitals.
4. Build a referral/nomination mechanic from day one — borrowed directly from GrowthX's playbook.
5. Hold off on paid marketing, SEO, and brand social — none of the four closest comps grew that way.
